Human Development and Family Studies

The BS in Human Development and Family Studies (HDFS) provides students with a comprehensive study of human development, family development, and family resource management.

If you are interested in understanding child development, helping families manage their resources, or influencing the type and quality of services available in our communities, then HDFS is for you.

Human Development and Family Studies (B.S.)

The Human Development and Family Studies (HDFS) Bachelor of Science program focuses on supporting positive human development over the life course in diverse economic and cultural contexts. Help people identify and develop important life skills for effective management of personal, family, and community resources, enabling families to thrive and lead healthy and happy lives.
